The Art Of Doing Nothing

Is One Thing Which Very Few People Are Frivolous

Relaxation is an art in which few people are proficient. With most of us relaxation merely means a period of activity that the one with the most energy can afford to give.

We are urged to relax in order to substitute leisure or "wasting" time for the mere doing of things.

This change has a beneficial effect, directing as it does the nerve current into a new channel, but true relaxation is mental as well as physical. It consists in the art of doing nothing.

To do nothing gracefully is difficult. The nerve current must be directed into a new channel, but true relaxation is mental as well as physical. It consists in the art of doing nothing.
